20 years working with twenty-somethings

- How they think, self-motivate and develop
- Gen Y traits and aspirations
- Emerging adulthood and young adult development
- Application of niche expertise to today’s workplace
THE CHALLENGE

Gen Y behavior frustrating many professionals has been misdiagnosed as a generational issue; the majority of individuals in their twenties are in the midst of a new life stage of development called emerging adulthood impacting their ability to navigate daily work activities. Far reaching consequences compromise the future health of all organizations if Gen Y (75 million) is not ready to replace the Boomer Generation (80 million) in the next decade.
THE SOLUTION

Gain a Competitive Advantage
Understand the changing dynamics of Gen Y employees, and implement strategies to impact retention, performance and promotability.
A deep Gen Y talent pool ready for significant responsibility, management, and leadership is a competitive advantage.

IDENTITY DEVELOPMENT

“How am I?”

- Self-awareness is limited and not tested
- Developing sense of self-efficacy
- Autonomy is derived externally not from inside
- Self-management skills
The brain is different

- The human brain is still developing
- Connection among regions
- Myelination: nerve fibers insulation = greater efficiency
- Synaptic pruning: nerve pruning = efficiency
- Experience required to promote physical development

global implications

EA is showing up around the globe?

- All industrialized knowledge economies
- Collectivism (family obligation) v. Individualism
- Cultural implications of sexual identity and marriage
- “Identity based work” common theme
- EA spreading to developing countries – currently being researched
Retention
(What do your demographics tell you?)

Performance
(Are they engaged and productive?)

Promotability
(Who will fill the leadership vacuum?)
New paradigm changes everything

- What practices are targeted to retain emerging adults?
- How does the organization and manager connect and engage each young employee?
- Does the organization have a plan to develop Gen Y employees for promotability?
Meeting both the generational and development needs of Gen Y.
Gen Y talent requires managers who utilize a developmental reference point in their management approach and who are developing them for their next role.

As managers, they are able to differentiate between where they are and where their potential lies.
DEVELOPMENTAL MANAGERS

Essential for “developing others”

- One Minute Meeting
- Mentoring Programs - strategic and frequent
- Flexible Feedback through Informal Reviews
- Learning Moment Philosophy
- Accessibility
- Three Question Habit
